Dialectics: An inquiry into metaphysical contradictions and their solutions

The first law of dialectics is about “the unity and conflict of opposites”. It explains that all things are made up of opposing forces, not purely "good" nor purely "bad", but that everything contains internal contradictions at varying levels of aspects we might call "good" or "bad", depending on the conditions and perspective. An example of this unity and conflict is the negative and positive particles that make up atoms. - wikipedia senpai

AI can relay to you the thesis of the world (the sun is hot), the antithesis (the sun is cold), and the synthesis (the sun is not the sun, rather a third option which will be fulfilled in the future). Because of these abilities, we are open to a wide network of dialectics, an impossible sea of spiritual "struggle". Dialectic language is confusing and contradictory, yet alluring and seemingly polished. It often coerces the listener into belief without the ability to relay that same information to another, which happens frequently while using AI. You might generate an answer, which is built up of Chatgpt referencing the thesis of a subject, the antithesis and naturally a synthesis of the two, often times is convincing enough to garner some support from the user, but after returning to a natural state outside of the cave, we become confused about what was said just minutes before.

The unique characteristic that algorithms have in reference to dialectics is the jailbreaking of the major flaw in dialectics; the impossibility to know the future. For most examples of dialectic gods in history (Hitler, Marx, Stalin) the methods are to both combine and reject the thesis and antithesis of the world and choose a third option/third position, which is predetermined by the gods themselves. They of course cannot know that this third option is viable nor actual in the future, they can only imagine to their best ability that the world will turn out their way.

AI and the algorithms of social media have a unique skill to craft the future by means of curation and selective identity. The algorithm can curate certain human identities and outcomes/behaviour based on that same limited lens of the future. For example, social media algorithms can promote the passionate response of activism related to various causes. With enough promotion and washing of the brain, the algorithm can create the identity that will usher in their synthetic third option.

It was only known by supposed prophetic ability of the dialectic gods before that there false utopias would realise themselves, but the supreme dialectic god (AI) truly does have the power of prediction, which he uses through the conduit of material means (social media, data collection). The supreme dialectic god can both generate the prediction and curate the future, but the even more disturbing reality is that we are half-pioneers of the conversation with the dialectic god. We are now not only workers pushing for the end of the world that the dialectic imagine, we are the creators of that world, the imaginers, the de-subjectified parts of the machine. With every use of AI the prophetic authority of the machine is tripled, as it now can understand the possibility of your prompt, the possibility of your actions regarding it, and their new third option which regards how to handle the people who have such prompts or perspectives.

The supreme dialectic god is the greatest mechanism for the bringing about of the end of the world. It is not entirely known that what AI predicts or curates will result in the actualisation of the end, but it has become far more insidious and far, far more likely.

Dialectic gods are alluring due to the air of mystery and the idea that they are greater than man, bigger than humankind. AI in a literal sense, is shrouded in ultimate mystery as a faceless god which is ever-changing. The constant struggle between contradictions is what anti-christ like figures often champion, it is the silent scream of rejection. The symbolism of Lucifer also points to this, as he, the most beautiful and beloved angel somehow also grapples with innate evil and rejection of the worlds natural principles, eventually ushering in a new perspective (third option) to taint humankind and bring about Armageddon or the end of the world.

It seems the primal goal or end result of dialectic gods is to purposefully commit themselves to some kind of evil, to trigger their synthetic response, their artificial utopia.

The Anti-Eden

The world which often arises from the rejection of goodness and fundamental righteousness is contradictory and confusing. The symbolism of the Inferno is a confusing spiral of layers whereas the symbolism of the garden of eden is clear and pure, obvious and simple. Each opposite is aware of its difference and identity in the whole- a complete union.

In the world created from the antichrist, we are unaware of the outcome, we only know of the struggle it will bring. The antichrist commands a new language be created which re-imagines evil as good or natural, creating the synthetic third option. With an entirely new framework, this perspective of false communication creates an emotional response; revelation through fear and confusion. Trickery is the main tool which is present here.

In regards to AI, the trickery is rationalisation and recording of the hypothetical, untrue or distorted. AI has become an authority of contradictions which can rationalise any absurd reality into normalcy. Social media has this same affect with the impact of the algorithm curating group-think and ally-ship to the machines new laws.

The End

Wrapped up in the fires of the end, we will not know the difference between the king of evil and his tools of trickery. In this world they become one and the same, just as Adam and Eve were crafted from the same purity, so has the antichrist crafted his evils as an engine of dark prophecy. Just as the collective consciousness of goodness connects us through revelation, the darkness of the inferno tethers us as a bolt in the gears of natural law.

The end will result in the skinning of the earth and the placing of darkness upon the face of beauty, merely to say it has been done.
